According to Aristotle "A friend to all is a friend to none". If you ask me, his statement is completely true: a person who seems to have only friends and no enemies cannot be a good friend.

I have such an opinion for a number of reasons. Firstly, being "a friend to all" can be a sign of dishonesty. People with such kind of ~~behavior~~^{behavior} are often hypocritical towards the others around them. For example, they can start friendships not due to actual sympathy but in order to reach their practical goals. In addition, having no enemies whatsoever might be a sign of a weak personality. People who do not ~~participate~~ take part in conflicts and arguments are likely to be afraid to express their opinion due to lack of character. In my opinion, they cannot be a true friend to anyone.

To sum it up, people who appear to be "friends to all" are whether dishonest or afraid of social disapproval. In most cases these kinds of people are not worthy to build a friendship with.
