A true science-fiction classic

Star Wars: A New Hope is a science-fiction adventure film directed by George Lucas, and it is definitely one of the most influential films of all time. The story follows Luke Skywalker, a farmboy from the planet of Tatooine, who joins a rebel alliance that opposes the Galactic Empire - a dictatorship-like government.

The overall plot is incredibly varied, as we follow our heroes who make a journey across the galaxy, visit unique alien planets and finally unite to destroy the Death Star - a superweapon of mass destruction. The film is full of interesting and memorable characters. One of them being Darth Vader - a mysterious and imposing villain who seeks to stop our heroes no matter what. Obi-wan Kenobi, on the other hand, plays the role of a kind and wise mentor who guides Luke on his journey.

This genre-defining film is such a masterpiece that I think everyone should give it a try. The younger audience will surely be entertained by the exciting action and somewhat plentiful humour, while the older viewers are likely to enjoy some of the more thought-provoking and philosophical themes present in the story.
